Developing People • Giving Back

From the moment you meet Dan Shea, COO of Shea Electric and Communications, you can feel the passion he has for his work and his sincere desire to help his employees become the best they can be. In business since 2006, Dan and his wife Patty, believe in old-fashioned values of faith, character and knowledge, and purposefully work to make Shea Electric a place for both personal and professional development for their employees. With access to speakers and training as well as quarterly reviews for feedback about themselves and the business, employees know Dan and Patty care about them as people as well as employees. Dan understands instinctively that if he works on the business, including helping develop his employees, and becomes a solution-oriented partner with his customers, results will follow.

And the results have indeed followed. Shea Electric and Communications has experienced 10 to 30 percent growth every year and has earned a loyal base of customers. Dan understands that not everyone is a good fit for his business.

“We want people to understand we always give a good/better/best solution and it’s their decision, because it’s their business. We sit down on the front end and spell it all out so they know what they’re getting. They may be paying more, but they get value because we anticipate the bigger picture beyond their immediate project.”

~ Dan Shea
